

'It can be different this time'

This is apropos a Business Recorder op-ed "It can be different this time" carried by the newspaper yesterday. The writer, Shabir Ahmed is, like ever, at his best. That he's endowed with deep political and economic insights is a fact. He writes in a very direct and honest way without worrying about offending the government of the day. Consider, for example, "The government's first year in office has been marked with an unwholesome rhetoric that people are getting tired of. It forms commission after commission to fix governance issues, only for each to get buried almost upon birth. In between there is the 'no NRO' raga that has few listeners."

Keep it up the good work, Shabir.
