KUDOS to the government for restricting the booking of new vehicles by non-taxpayers.

For the first time in my life as a law-abiding Pakistani I feel privileged being a taxpayer and at the same time feel sorry for my second grade 'non-taxpaying' countrymen.

Although I may have different views on the government's style of governance, the finance minister and his team for once have shown some nerve in introducing the law in the face of an organised mafia.

I am sure taxpayers at large will benefit from this measure.

At the same time, I would like to denounce the Pakistan Automotive Manufacturers Association for lobbying against this decision. Such elements are not sincere to the country and their stance should be condemned.
